

I have been on the Indiana's Telephone Privacy list since it was established. It works very well. I very seldom get a unsolicited phone call at home. No more calls at meal time, or after 10pm when I'm in bed, trying to sell me something I don't want. If I want a product, I don't need someone to call me, I will go looking for a company selling what I want. Indiana's law works better than I ever thought possible. I use to get 6 to 8 calls a week. I don't remember the last time I got an unsolicited call. I hope the FCC would not impose a federal standard on a State law that is working so well.
